

BASIL ARMONIS, MD, PhD
Medical Oncologist

Medical Degree from the University of Rome "La Sapienza" with the grade "Excellent" (1984). He is specialist in both Internal Medicine and Medical Oncology and earned a PhD presenting the thesis "Thyroid Hormones and Breast Cancer". In 1996 obtained the European Certification in Medical Oncology.

Presently, Consultant Oncologist, Saint Savvas Hospital, Athens, practicing the full spectrum of Oncology, with a special interest in Urological and Breast cancer.

Previously, Consultant Oncologist in public hospitals in Athens and at the University College Hospitals in London.

He trained in Medical Oncology at the University College London Hospital and St Peters-The Institute of Urology (1991 – 1992) as well as at Evangelismos Hospital in Athens.

Author and co-author of books, book chapters, articles and web presentations on various oncology topics and published in international journals.

RESEARCH

Translational research investigating the thyroid hormones participation in breast and prostate cancer pathogenesis and their influence on the course of these diseases. This research produced important knowledge useful for developing of new prognostic tools and novel pharmacologic interventions.

CONTINUING EDUCATION

Participation in educational seminars (Harvard University, Yale University, University College London Hospital), and in national and international Oncology conferences.

LANGUAGES

English, Greek, Italian.